Published November 23, 2026 by Christian Schreiber

PerfDelta finished week 47 of 2026 as the #1 Launch of the Week on The Launch Directory. The directory ranks each week's launches by community votes, and PerfDelta closed the week of 16 to 22 November with 18 votes, two ahead of second place. Thank you to everyone who voted.

In short: rank one of the week with 18 community votes, listed in the section "CDN & performance", entered as a free listing. The award badge on the listing reads "#1 Product of the Week".

Week 47 result: 18 votes, two ahead of second place

The Launch Directory groups launches by calendar week, from Monday to Sunday. When the week closes, the three launches with the most votes carry the title Launch of the Week.

Rank	Launch	Votes	Description in the ranking
1	PerfDelta	18	Free website speed test with Core Web Vitals, competitor benchmarks and AI recommendations
2	Nitrozen	16	Beautiful changelogs to keep your users in the loop
3	ResourcesHunt	15	Discover, Submit, Save and Share Useful Resources.

The race stayed open until the weekend. On Thursday, 19 November, we counted eleven votes for PerfDelta. Seven more arrived by Sunday evening, and three votes separated first from third place at the close.

Launch Directory ranking: community votes per calendar week decide the top three

The rules are short, and they explain what the result measures:

- One cohort per week: a listing is scheduled for a launch week and goes live automatically on that Monday. PerfDelta was scheduled for the week starting 16 November 2026.
- Votes decide the order: the ranking follows the number of community votes, not an editorial review.
- Free or paid: a free listing asks for a badge on the product's own homepage that links to the listing. A paid launch for 5 US dollars plus VAT needs no badge. We chose the free listing, and the badge sits in the row of directories on our homepage.

These rules come from the notifications the directory sent us on 12, 14 and 23 November 2026. The directory is operated by Zinn Digital Ltd.

PerfDelta listing in the "CDN & performance" section: up to three pages per test, field and lab data

Voters saw PerfDelta the way the listing describes it. One test measures up to three pages of a website. For each page the report shows the Core Web Vitals of real Chrome users from the Chrome UX Report next to the Lighthouse lab values. Where a page has too few visits for field data, the report falls back to the values of the whole domain. If you name up to two competitors, it compares the domains, and it turns the findings into prioritised recommendations. The test is free and needs no account.

Three building blocks for work with AI agents went live in the two weeks before the launch:

- Since 12 November the PerfDelta free plan includes the REST API and the MCP server, with one scan of one URL every 24 hours.
- The PageSpeed MCP server lets Claude, ChatGPT, Cursor or GitHub Copilot in VS Code start scans and read reports.
- The agent brief hands a report to a coding agent as a work order: on the free plan for your own scans, from Solo for every measured domain. The article on website speed optimization with AI coding agents shows the workflow.

Limits of the result: 18 votes in one weekly cohort are a signal, not a market ranking

- Small numbers: the first three places are three votes apart. A handful of voters would have been enough to change the order.
- One week, all categories: the ranking compares the launches of the same week across all sections. It says nothing about how PerfDelta compares with other speed tests.
- Votes are not a product test: nobody checked measurement accuracy or the quality of the recommendations. Our methodology describes how the measurements work.
- Reach unknown: we have no figures on how many people visit the directory, so we do not derive any statement about awareness from the result.

We read the result as feedback from people who voted for the listing. A vote shows interest. It does not show that someone has used the product. Whether a report helps you fix a slow page matters more to us than a rank. If something in your report is unclear or wrong, please tell us via the contact page.
